How often do we at Kenyon really imagine what it must have been like here, say twenty, fifty, one-hundred and fifty-nine years ago when it all began on the hill? Should we bother? Is our Kenyon heritage more than interesting trivia? Don't we better understand ourselves by looking at who and what went before us? Let's place ourselves in our past on the hill. Half of the student body can only be traced back to 1969 when the first woman was admitted (although coeducation didn't begin until 1972). At the time of WWII there hadn't been a black at Kenyon since Prince Kwaku Lebie from the African Gold Coast attended in 1865. (He died here and is memorialized by a chapel window). How can the sixty percent of Kenyon men who are independent identify with a school that in 1950 was eighty percent Greek? What would it feel like to be here the winter of 1831 when a revival suspended classes for two days? It was surprisingly homogenous at times.

Yet our heritage of a fairly uniform bunch must be acclaimed for a legacy of excellence. What kind of school can boast such graduates as Robert Lowell, Rutherford B. Hayes, Paul Newman, and Olof Palme? A school so small — that only has ten or eleven thousand living alumni — has far reaching efforts on the world. Although this (Kenyon) might not be the ideal world, it is unique, and offers great rewards to the person who appreciates it for what it is. A graduate of 1862 reflected upon his past life at Kenyon — as we find ourselves reflecting.

"Perhaps we did not measure ourselves accurately with the greater world outside of us. There were motives at work in society of which we did not dream. But we were storing up enthusiasm and self-confidence, qualities which might not have grown so easily and naturally had the conditions which surrounded us been different."

Gambier Hill flattens out one-hundred and fifty feet above the gentle Kokosing, which "makes a sort of gigantic ox-bow in the wide lowlands to the south-east," and "disappears far away to the south and west." The bishop described the eastern valley from the hill as "a smiling land" and the western side as an "unconquered wilderness." When Chase, a hired man, and his son Dudley first mounted the hill, it was all a "windfall"; fallen trees stretched between "a second growth of thick trees and bushes." A road ran a mile off from the southern slope of the hill. Within the surrounding few miles only a few squatters in their cabins were here. The only real civilization was Mt. Vernon, the home of Johnny Appleseed.

That was 1826. By 1829 Old Kenyon, the earliest example of gothic architecture in American colleges, was built and occupied. The settlement had stirred up distress in the nearby countryside. Many of the local people were veterans of the American Revolution and the recent War of 1812. Old Kenyon resembled a fortress, with walls 4½ feet thick, positioned on a hill, and financed with English money. There was reason for expecting more warfare.

Middle Path, as it is now, was completed in the 1840's. At that time, most of the important buildings on the campus had been completed, with the exception of Peirce and the Holy Christ Chapel. Milnor Hall, a grammar school for boys until it was changed to the Kenyon Military Academy in 1885, was the second major landmark in Gambier. The K.M.A. was an important part of Kenyon; at one time it was better known and had several times as many students attending.

By 1869, when the chapel was completed, Rosse Hall, Bexley Hall, and Ascension had been built.

Today, the ringing of the chapel chimes is as familiar a sound to Kenyon students as it was 116 years ago. As a verse from the "Old Kenyon" song indicates: "Yes! Yes! We know them well — Those hours the deep-toned bell — pealed swift away."

Kenyon Traditions

Although we still share the same surroundings as the students from our Kenyon past did, many experiences are dramatically different today. Before 1860, when there were only oral exams, a student described the academic atmosphere as one of "... short, pointed questions of the examiners ... and the equally precise answers of the student; all this was so much like clock-work and oppressive, that the scene reminded us of certain historical paintings of the Inquisition." During the same era, the important activities outside of class were fishing or hunting and sharpening one's debating skills in a literary society. The original Philomathesian Society, in 1832, when Edwin M. Stanton, the famous secretary of war under Lincoln, was a member, divided into societies because of Northern and Southern tensions. Philomathesian and the new southern group, Nu Pi Kappa, were usually respectful of each other but for two years, they carried weapons to protect themselves from each other. Fortunately, no blood was shed.

The middle of the 1800's marked the transition from literary societies to fraternities, athletics, and other social functions. Delta Kappa Epsilon was the first fraternity to appear at Kenyon, and baseball was the first important sport to entertain the students. "The singing school," as it was dubbed in later years, first enjoyed its music at this time as American colleges carried Latin songs over from Germany.

Perhaps a golden age in Kenyon's athletic history was the late 1930's when Kenyon were national champs in tennis, flying competition, and near champions in Polo.

Kenyon has always been a school in which its students worked hard, and played hard. In the early sixties Kenyon was ranked the third best school in the country. We have always strived for the best and continue to strive.

Farewell, Old Kenyon, Fare thee well.

And yet we are not like Kokosing
Which beareth naught upon its swells
But foam of motion's own composing;
Farewell, old Kenyon, fare thee well.

But when we are far from Kokosing
We still shall hear a calling bell,
When round us evening shades are closing;
Farewell, old Kenyon, fare thee well.

And see a river like Kokosing
In meadows sweet with asphodel,
Where memory dwells dear past supposing;
Farewell, old Kenyon, fare thee well.
